Differential 5: The layer cut requires more maintenance than the step cut. Difference 6: The layered cut combines with all kinds of face, while the step cut is ideal for stretching round, squares and oval faces. Different 7: The layered cut is more modern than the step cut. You can also be interested in: layers in layers vs hair not-layers: all differences and the best option for your hair has this crucial moment arrived when you must decide on your new haircut? Are you hesitating between the layers and the step? To be honest, these doubts invading you and occupy all your existence are quite common. Do you know why? Because today there is a lot of talk about step and layered cuts. They are very similar cuts and techniques. However, they have some minor but significant differences. Those differences, which seem small, are what lead stylists to advise our customers in what kind of cut is more convenient for them, either in layers or step. Although layered cuts and steps are very similar in terms of symmetry, since both of less for more, there is a very important difference. The difference is that in the step cut, the steps are always well defined. On the other hand, the layer cut, which I think is an evolutionary step cut, allows much more options and more interesting lengths. It is discreet and suitable for all kinds of hair. Do you want to go deeper into the differences between the layers and the step to make your decision? So let the countdown start. Difference 1: The layered cut increases the volume of hair when a client arrives at the living room, besides hearing their expectations in relation to a haircut, the first thing I do is Watch her hair. I do not do this to test it on hair problems, but to check if her hair is good or thick. This is very important to decide on a layered or step cut. Do you know why? Because [your highlight background = - ff5e8 Å³], if you have thin hair, you will want to increase the volume. It can be reached with a cut that creates the sensation of having more hair, and this happens with a layer cut. [/ Su Highlight] Step cut is recommended and specific to long and thick, healthy hair, whether direct or curly. This helps reduce volume and creates more disciplined and controlled hair. The risk of having frizz is too low with separate steps in haircut. So, now you know that if your hair is rectified and you want to increase the volume, you'll get a layer cut. Allows many variations, which I will speak later. And if your hair is thick, and you want to diminish the volume and the frisk, a layer cut will always be a good option. Difference 2: The cutting in layers is more versatile, while the pitch cut is more clinical. I am not exaggerating when I say that the layers cut is for all kinds of hair, of its versatility. Over the years, this cut has graved thanks to new ideas and because there were so many different styles. You can choose between long or short layers for diagonal or invisible layers. If you choose a stepping, you have to assume that your hair will always be shaped like the steps of a ladder, so it is difficult to get many variations. Difference 3: The layered cut allows you to play with different hairstyles more than the cut of step do you like to vary your hairstyles? You are always checking Instagram for inspiration to find new This is also a determining factor because layered cutting is at the forefront of style world. For example, if you have a half-layer hairstyle, you can let it dry for the hair to take on your natural form. Or, you can play with a side hair and comb your hair to the side. Whether Have long hair and cut it in layers, you can imitate Hollywood's old-fashioned divas hairstyles as Rita Hayworth. If you cut your hair in steps, the chances of varying your hairstyle are reduced by the difference between one step and the next. For example, a layered haircut requires more skill and knowledge to achieve a pure hairstyle. Differential 4: The layered cut is more imperceptible than the step cutting the layers is more subtle than the step cut, which is more evident and always perceptual to the naked eye. By contrary, the layers take the volume without compromising the length. In addition, if you decide to cut into invisible layers, they create volume inside the hair without being noticed. They are ideal for medical hair and very thin or curly hair to create more voluptuousness. Different 5: The layer cut requires more maintenance than the step cut usually, the layered cut need of more maintenance. For example, when the layers begin in your crown to the ends, you will need more visits to the room to maintain the shape. The opposite happens in stage cuts. Due to the separation between the steps, the form is maintained as the hair grows. Differential 6: The layered cut fits all kinds of faces, while the step cut is ideal for stretching, square and oval faces layered cutting is ideal for all kinds of faces, precisely due to your Versatility and subtlety. Does your face have a round, square or oval shape? So, my advice is to decide on a stage cut. You will achieve this goal that you yearn: stretching the shape of your face, framing and highlighting your resources by creating a perfect oval effect. You may also be interested in: 5 low maintenance bobs for round faces: You will love them! Differential 7: The layered cut is more modern than the step of step look for a more modern and revolutionary look? So, layered cutting will be good options precisely because of the alternatives it offers. The sliced step, on the other hand, is more clinical. It is best for women who want changes without challenge or rebellion. Conclusions After analyzing each of the differences, it is clear that a stage cut has a much more pronounced definition and a stronger and more defined effect on the hair. Also it is ideal for heavy hair à € à €
