Classic players are loving the game, but they hate waiting on long queues to play. Despite Blizzard's attempts to reduce queues, releasing various new servers since launching and increasing existing capacity, players in some realms still face queues of hours to play. This is making some players desired to transfer characters from these blocked kingdoms to those with low populations. In the Wow, including the Classic, your character is restricted to the server - also called the kingdom - where they were created, so it is impossible to simply join another server and continue playing with that same character. You have a different list of characters for each kingdom that you join. For the Wow Classic, Blizzard announced a short period in which players can move from highly populated kingdoms to other people with low grace populations. The company said on September 4 that the resource will be available shortly and revealed the complete list of realms included in this limited time offer. In the current retail version of WOW, you should buy a character transfer for $ 25, if you want to move one of them to another kingdom, keeping everything you've done. But for now, this is impossible at Wow Classic. The page of blizzard character transfer stores clearly tells that this product is not available for classic, which means that the characters of the players are locked up for the Kingdom that are at the moment. Blizzard still needs to comment on this issue or say when you want to bring paid character transfers to Wow Classic. At the moment, this can restrict you to avoid overpopulating servers that have already many players in them. Players who have created characters on these low population servers likely they want to move to a busiest server as soon as they could have more first-line players to interact. If paid character transfers are introduced to Wow Classic, Blizzard will make a great deal. Players can expect to work in the same way they do retail. But for now, keep playing where you are or try to create a new character from scratch on another server. server. server.
