Best offline free music apps

Just like many of you out there, I spend my day rushing from place to place, trying to get a thousand things done at once. Sometimes though, there's just too much stress. So, I like to make everything better by plugging into some beloved tunes and let the music wash away all the problems. Oh yeah!Whether it's riding the subway to work, jogging in the park, or simply chilling at home, music is arguably the best way to help us get into a good mood. If you're the type that needs to have music on hand at all times, then rest easy, because Android Authority has you covered!Also, check out some of the best apps of 2012 for Android! Android offers a multitude of apps dedicated to music lovers, so you can listen to your favorite tunes with just a few taps and swipes. Whether you're a neat freak who organizes music according to artist, song title, and genre (alphabetically, of course), or you love to shuffle tunes around until you find the perfect song for the moment, Android really offers everything you need to enjoy your music collection.Let's go through some of the best Android apps for music lovers. ShazamFor many Android lovers out there, Shazam is the app when it comes to music discovery. By playing 10 or so seconds of virtually any son, it connects to the cloud and finds the tune for you. If you've never tried it before, you absolutely must do it now. You can simply hold up your Android device to the music and let Shazam work its magic, even going so far as to find lyrics for you. It also allows you to share tags of your favorite music on Facebook and Twitter. If you want to go a step further, you can look up music videos of your songs on YouTube or download the newest tracks from the Amazon MP3 store. Shazam will help you stay up to date on your favorite songs and artists, without ever breaking a sweat. Absolutely awesome! Shazam for Android on AppBrain There are times when even your list of hand-picked songs just won't make the cut, and you're looking to have a fresh supply of tunes delivered right to your Android device. Well, with the Digitally Imported Radio app, you will be able to choose from 37 different radio channels, each dedicated to playing the hottest and newest songs from every genre you can imagine. No more shuffling around the songs available on your device for a song you haven't heard in a while. With Digitally Imported Radio for Android on AppBrain SoundHound Have you ever experienced hearing a snippet of a song, then having it stuck in your head for the rest of the day without ever finding out the artist or the song's title? If you're anything like me, you try and remember, but often cannot, after the fact. Much in the way Shazam functions above, Soundhound does, too. With SoundHound, you'll never have to worry about suffering from UIS (Unidentified Song Syndrome) ever again! You can pretty much input anything related to the song into this app — a 4-second snippet, a single line lyric, or even just your own voice humming out the tune of the song — and this great app will identify the song for you. No more searching around on the Internet looking for "that song" ever again! You can identify an unlimited number of songs with the SoundHound, as well as share them on Facebook or Twitter as soon as you find them.Also, commenters all across this site and the blogosphere claim that this one works much better than Shazam, but we will that for you to decide. Let us know! Both are great to have, though. SoundHound for Android on AppBrain There are a lot of people out there who love being meticulous about their song lists, and if you're one of them, doubleTwist Player is a wise app to have in your arsenal! This great app not only automatically arranges your songs depending on title, artist, and genre, but it can also rank them according to most plays or on their age. Of course, you can arrange the songs according to your own criteria, too. doubleTwist Player also automatically searches for the cover art of the albums online. This function is pure gold. folks. Download this immediately if you have more than a few hundred songs, and want to be able to organize them in a way that lets you get access to the tunes you crave instantaneously. doubleTwist Player for Android on AppBrain Mixzing Media Player is the best app for those who just want to lay back and let their Android device do the heavy lifting (that little device in your hand is actually packing some serious horsepower). Whether you want your song lyrics identified, your cover art found online, or your song lists arranged, this app will definitely do all of the above, and much more. If you've ever fallen asleep while listening to music and found your device drained the next day, worry no more, as Mixzing has an auto shutdown feature that turns off the player at a preset time. You can also put your device on music lock so that you won't accidentally switch tunes or turn off the app while doing those crazy dance moves that you are famous for. MixZing Media Player for Android on AppBrain Sometimes, your artistic side just wants to get out, and with the Ringtone Maker, you will be able to get your creative juices flowing. If you've ever wanted or customize the ringtones or notifications on your Android device (or create them from scratch), the Ringtone Maker has got you covered. You can customize every component of sound coming out of this app, from the length of the piece, to the sound format, and those subtle nuances, like bass and voice. For customizers of their devices, and for those that don't like paying for ringtones, this is a must have. Ringtone Maker for Android on AppBrain Possibly one of the best known music apps out there, Winamp lets you easily sync up your music to your computer. No worries about being a PC or Mac user here; Winamp is supported by both operating systems. Complete with many song arrangement options and even a device lock player (you can play, pause, or shuffle your music while the device is locked) Winamp delivers full versatility when it comes to usage and features. Seriously recommended for those looking for a different music player. Winamp for Android on AppBrain Sometimes, the best things come in small packages. With the AudioManager widget, you can adjust the volume on your Android device by simply tapping the widget. No need to find that app to adjust your volume settings anymore! You can also customize your AudioManager with dozens of available skins, to give your device a unique look. AudioManager for Android on AppBrain Every once in a while, we have to let that musician inside us come out and rock, and with the xPiano Android app, you can do just that. This great app offers ten different virtual instruments, as well as 4 different octaves, so that you can choose what beautiful music to make. It also integrates multitouch controls, and a record and play function. Bust out that inner Mozart now! I guarantee this one is a hoot when you're with people after a few. xPiano for Android on AppBrain This one is for you aspiring composers and DJs out there - ok - maybe not really. But if you're hooked on bassy beats, or tipity-tap highs, then you can accelerate onset hearing loss even faster! But more seriously, it's awesome to be able to tweak your tunes to your liking. You can tweak the music on your Android device with this app, letting you fully customize the sound and quality of your tunes. Whether you love that deep, heart-thumping bass, or you want to tweak according to the 11 stock music presets (such as Rock, Latin or Jazz), the choice is all yours. Equalizer for Android on AppBrain So, there you go music lovers! A list of the best music and music-related apps available on Android. Whether you're waiting in line, cruising your way to work or just chilling at your favorite spots, make sure to let your Android device supply you with your favorite tunes.Think we've missed out on your favorite music app? Let us know in the comments and we will check them out! AppsApp Reviews, Best Apps, Music Apps Shutterstock / Kaspars GrinvaldsWorkouts are just plain easier with music. There have been a slew of studies done on the effects of music on physical performance and conclusions for moderate exercise in general show that working out with some beats can make you run a little farther and feel better about it afterward. Developers are all well aware of the psychology behind this. That said, these aren't the apps designed to discover new music, so don't download them for that. If you already have a music streaming service like Spotify, then there's usually a workout channel or two, and if you actually pay for your streaming you have more control over your track selection and playlists. Songza is another decent streamer that's often forgotten, but it offers decent workout options. And don't forget the other biggies, Pandora and Slacker. If you don't already stream or don't have a fitness tracker, here are five apps designed specifically to match music with your workouts. Spring A newcomer to the music app space, Spring combines the best features of general music streaming apps, such as curated music selections and 35,000 songs with the added option to design your own interval training. The music will let you know when Spring is going to pump you up. Spring knows the science that explains why matching motion to music is effective, and makes full use of it. Spring doesn't have a selection to match Pandora, but the app does include GPS to track the basics of your run like distance and your song-based performance so you can see what motivated you. The downsides: Spring is only out for Apple devices at the moment, and you only get five hours of streaming free. The upsides: Spring does work on your Apple Watch, and also works with Apple Health. The Android version of the app is set to launch late summer 2015. RockMyRun RockyMyRun is all about the tempo. Also curated, their DJs make exercise mixes with steady tempos to keep up your endurance. This writer has personally been a victim of the mismatched station on regular streaming services, where you're hitting your third mile and suddenly some out-of-place song comes on and you have to dig your phone out of your pocket to skip the song. By then your stride and momentum are both broken. RockMyRun helps you avoid all that. It can play seamlessly without long gaps between tracks that would otherwise kill your momentum and distract you with the question: "Did I just lose my connection?" Even better, you can play music offline. Another great feature that keeps RockMyRun highly rated is the cadence matcher; the trademarked Body-Driven Music matches your music to your movement — or rather, to your steps. It's like a modern version of those old military marching songs, but for civvies. Even if you don't use that, mixes BPMs are listed so if you already know what works for you, you can go right to it. The app works with MapMyRun as well as Nike+, Endomondo, and Runtastic. Register at no cost and you get all playlists under 45 minutes for free. Sadly, you need Rockstar level ($5 a month or $36 a year) to go ad free and get all the good stuff, continuous playback, four hour playlists, and access to Body Driven Music. Fair warning, their drum and bass offerings are a little slim at the moment. A recent update has caused some crashing issues, but their customer support is responsive so let's hope those will be resolved quickly. It's on iTunes and the Google Play Store. FIT Radio Also unique to iTunes, FIT Radio is one of the original gangsters of Apple fitness music apps. Their curated mixes come in a bunch of shapes and sizes. They have workout specific mixes, new mixes daily, and a tap-and-play setup that doesn't require creating playlists or caching any files. Of course the mixes keep BPM and rhythm continuity. The free version only offers three to six mixes per genre and has ads , but you do get new mixes and the option to turn off the explicit lyrics. Paying for premium grants full ad-free access to the full mix catalog, including unlimited skips, and DJ profiles. A month is $4, a year is $28, life time is $80. Decent genre and station selection rounds out why this is a good choice for Android and Apple users. GYM Radio Everything about GYM serves real gym-rat style with a dash of fist pump. It has a three main stations based on what you're doing; Cardio, Gym and Hardcore. Cardio is a little more upbeat to motivate your cadence. Gym is steady, inspirational, with a definite focus on what's hot in the streets; it's definitely not your taxes. Hardcore is music that allows no flinching, and tells you to HTFU. New songs are added every day. One annoying thing about Gym Radio is that between the constant requests to try premium and the ads, it can be hard to just get back to the radio screen. Premium gets rid of the ads, and gets you offline listening, skips, and new songs while they're still new. However, it does have a "Workout Mode" that beeps at one minute intervals to help you keep track of reps. It's also the best workout radio app for flossing (showing off), because it has a camera button in the app. Share your photo on Instagram and hashtag it (#gymradio) to get added to their hall of fame, which you can see within the Gym Radio app. Click on the photos there and you end up on the Instagram shot; great for anyone trying to build an Instagram following for your hot bod. Grab it on the Play Store or iTunes. PaceDJ PaceDJ is totally free for both Apple and Android users. This is the app people who already have a long list of downloaded mp3s and want a player that will organize them for workouts. The BPM identifier starts by finding tracks on your phone, then guides you through the process of creating your first playlist for walking, running, cycling, or "other." It starts with a median BPM setting based on your choice of exercise, (75BPM for cycling, 130 for running for example). It will warn you it'll pick songs 10 BPM more or less than your target speed, as well as double tempo or half tempo songs (again, based on exercise choice). If you're not sure how many BPMs are comfortable, it has pace measurement and touch-drum features that let you figure out your comfortable range, or tap it out to correct it. Though if you already know but you don't have many on-phone tracks, you can head to the Pace DJ website to find full exercise specific playlists with iTunes an Amazon links. On the other hand, if you have a massive library, be aware it will take some time for the program to sort your files.
