Applicable Products` Tablet` Smartphone Example: multiplying 7,500,000 of 12 results in 9.E7 instead of 90,000,000. Due to length limitations and for the purpose of simplification, the calculation result is displayed in scientific notation when the whole is a multiple of 10 million or when the entire part of the result consisted of 16 or more digits (AEB = A * 10 ^ b; times and 10 to the power of b). This is normal and does not indicate a problem with the device. The result of the calculation is correct when calculating a trigonometric function with the scientific calculator in the built-in calculator app in a horizontal mode. Example: TAN45 is not equal 1, as shown in the following figure. This is because the default calculator calculates the values of trigonometric functions in the radiant unit, and therefore considers 45 as a radiant (not a degree). Tap Å ° in calculator for trigonometric functions to be measured in degrees. The result will then be displayed as 1 when you enter Tan45. The result, when the addition of percentages is not correct in the app calculator. The following figure shows an example of this problem. The calculation rules predict that the computer recognizes AA Å ± B% as adding (or subtracting) sometimes B% à €
