When it was so difficult to download something without installing a toolbar, download accelerator or some other unwanted "crapware"? The image is not available I'm not sure when it happened, but lately everything that download wants to install a toolbar, download accelerator or some other piece of \tilde{A} $\hat{a} \in \neg$ "Crapware. $\hat{a} \in \neg$ " Crapware. $\hat{a} \in \neg$ " or the page that hosts the file has half a duct of links that say \tilde{A} $\hat{a} \in \neg$ " download with just a right choice. Fortunately, with some simple tips, you can avoid the installation of something you do not want or be attracted to a Wack-a-Popup game. 1. Always look for a "download". "The CNET download is news by having a big green button that says \hat{A} a \in $^{\mathbb{T}}$ \neg Download Now \sim a \in ", but actually installs ad-supported supported support A" Download Manager, \neg This then downloads the file. But under the button, it is a small text link that says \hat{A} a \in $^{\mathbb{T}}$ \neg "Direct Free Link.Ar \in \neg A direct download means that you do not want to use another program; You just want to something on your computer, try the custom installation. You do not normally have to do anything more complicated than checking a box next to what you want to install. But more often, you will see proprietary options for things you did not want: a toolbar, a new page or a different pattern search engine in the web browser, or something worse. Go ahead and uncheck these things, click on "Nexa", and enjoy your sanity. 3. Scan, scan, scan it to malware tool, this is. Virustotal is an excellent free web service that allows you to upload a file and scan it to malware. Just make sure you use it before opening the file on your computer. And if you are not already running a fulltime antivirus, you should be (although less a problem if you are a Mac user). There are many options to choose from, but Avast Free Antivirus, Bitdefender and Norton are all popular. They will make a decent job of protecting you from the most malicious software.
